By the end, you’ll have a solid grasp of how postal codes work in Hong /Kong and why they matter.

Why Postal Codes Matter in Hong /Kong

Unlike many countries that rely heavily on ZIP codes or postal codes to streamline delivery, Hong Kong’s system is unique. Historically, the city did not use postal codes for everyday mailing because the postal service could sort items by street names, building numbers, and districts. However, with the advent of e commerce, international shipping, and a growing expatriate community, a standardized postal code system has become increasingly valuable.

- Accuracy: Ensures parcels are routed correctly, reducing delays.
- Efficiency: Saves time for postal workers and delivery drivers.
- Convenience: Helps customers and partners identify addresses quickly.
- Compliance: Meets international shipping regulations that often require a postal code.

Hong /Kong’s Postal Code Format

Hong Kong’s postal code system follows a simple yet effective structure: a six digit number that is typically prefixed with the district code. The format can be represented as:

District Code + 6 Digit Number
For instance, the postal code for a building in the Kwun Tong district might appear as “KWT123456.” While the “KWT” prefix is not officially part of the code, it is commonly used in informal contexts to signify the district. Officially, the postal code is just the six digits.

Here’s a quick reference for the main districts and their common prefixes:

- Central & Western: CW
- Eastern: ES
- Southern: SN
- Wan Chai: WC
- Sham Shui Po: SSP
- Kwun Tong: KWT

When you’re writing an address, you typically include the street name, building number, and the six digit postal code. For example:

123, Kwun Tong Road, Kwun Tong, Kowloon, 123456
